Common Logical Fallacies Everyone Should Know

1 Ad Hominem

It occurs when someone attacks directly the person making an argument rather than criticizing the argument itself.

2 Straw Man

When someone attacks a distorted version of the original argument that they themselves created (i.e. "the straw man").

3 Appeal to Authority

Asserting that something must be true because it is backed up by someone who is (allegedly) an authority on the subject.

4 Slippery Slope

Taking an argument from the first, sensible premise to an undesirable or extreme conclusion via a number of hastily connected steps.

5 Bandwagon

The bandwagon fallacy occurs when something is said to be true or good simply because it is popular.

6 Appeal to Ignorance

When it is said that an argument must be true if it cannot be proven false, or false if it cannot be proven true.

7 False Dilemma

This occurs when two choices are presented as the only possible options when, in fact, other alternatives exist.

8 Hasty Generalization

This logical fallacy happens when a general conclusion is drawn based on a sample size that is too small.

9 Red Herring

This occurs when someone deliberately attempts to move the issue under discussion to a new, irrelevant topic.

10 Appeal to Tradition

When one claims that something must be good or true because it has been practiced for a long time (that is, traditionally).
