Radical History of Development Studies Uma Kothari,2016-12-15 In this book some of the leading thinkers in development studies trace the history of their multi disciplinary subject from the late colonial period and its establishment during decolonization all the way through to its contemporary concerns with poverty reduction They present a critical genealogy of development by looking at the contested evolution and roles of development institutions and exploring changes in development discourses These recollections by those who teach research and practise development challenge simplistic unilinear periodizations of the evolution of the discipline and draw attention to those ongoing critiques of development studies including Marxism feminism and postcolonialism which so often have been marginalized in mainstream development discourse The contributors combine personal and institutional reflections with an examination of key themes including gender and development NGOs and natural resource management The book is radical in that it challenges orthodoxies of development theory and practice and highlights concealed critical discourses that have been written out of conventional stories of development The contributors provide different versions of the history of development by inscribing their experiences and interpretations some from left inclined intellectual perspectives Their accounts elucidate a more complex and nuanced understanding of development studies over time simultaneously revealing common themes and trends and they also attempt to reposition Development Studies along a more critical trajectory The volume is intended to stimulate new thinking on where the discipline may be moving It ought also to be of great use to students coming to grips with the historical continuities and divergences in the theory and practice of development Report Institute of Development

Studies (Brighton, England),1970 Development in a divided world, edited by Dudley Seers and Leonard Joy Dudley George SEERS (and JOY (Leonard)),1971 Agricultural Practices for Sustaining Mankind Bimalendu

Bhattacharya,2023-01-01 The major concern of this book is to focus on the contrasting situation represented by the agricultural practices of the smallholder farming population on the one hand and industrial agriculture practised by giant corporate houses on the other considering the former s ability to meet the growing requirement of food by the global population The contest between these two widely different sectors favours smallholder farmers as they derive impetus from a greater reliance on the role of research and development in support of a process of greater intensification They overcome the hurdles of competition from industrial farming by concentrating on mitigating the effects of climate change through a sustainable process Their methods confirm that they will be able to meet the growing demand for food in the future without impairing the environment This is in sharp contrast to the dangerous implications of industrial agriculture which impacts negatively on our environment and jeopardises the future of humanity Economic Growth and Sustainable Development Peter N.
