

General relativity

From the world learned of the revolutionary Special Theory of Relativity proposed by Albert Einstein and published in 1905, physics underwent its most revolutionary change since the days of Isaac Newton. Nevertheless, Einstein had yet another surprise left: the so-called General Theory of Relativity, of 1916—a much more complex and complete theory from which several interesting predictions arise and have been confirmed over time.

Why a second theory?

According to Einstein, the laws of physics are the same for all observers, but the way they are perceived is different. Einstein's theory of relativity is a generalization of Newton's theory of gravity, which is only valid in the case of weak gravitational fields. Einstein solved the problem of providing an theory by providing an equivalent principle.

A deformed universe

Einstein established that gravity was not a force, but rather the consequence of the deformation of space-time that any body with mass generates. Mass, when accumulating in a point, deforms the space around it and affects the way time flows through that curved deformation.

The most fundamental principle of general relativity is that the laws of physics are the same for all observers.

Light that bends

Perhaps the most surprising confirmation of one of Einstein's predictions, based on the General Theory of Relativity, happened in 1919 during the course of a solar eclipse.

According to the general theory of relativity, the path of light is curved by the presence of mass. This was first demonstrated during the solar eclipse of 1919, when the light from distant stars was observed to be deflected by the Sun's gravity.

In 1919, the British astronomer Arthur Eddington led an expedition to observe the solar eclipse of May 29, 1919. He measured the deflection of starlight by the Sun's gravity, which confirmed Einstein's prediction.

4 dimensions

For the universe according to Einstein's theory, although the space is three-dimensional, time is also a dimension, forming a four-dimensional spacetime.

76 years

After 76 years, the theory of relativity is still one of the most important theories in physics.

Gravitational lenses

Another prediction based on the General Theory of Relativity concerns gravitational lenses. Because of the deformation of space-time caused by the presence of massive objects, the light of certain far stars and galaxies is deflected when passing near the Sun.

The lensing effect is observed when a massive object, such as a galaxy or a cluster of galaxies, passes between a distant source of light and the observer. The gravity of the lens bends the light, creating multiple images of the source.

Gravitational lensing is a powerful tool for studying distant galaxies and dark matter. It can also be used to detect exoplanets and other objects in our solar system.

ALBERT EINSTEIN

The most revolutionary prediction of the theory of relativity is that the speed of light is constant for all observers, regardless of their relative motion. This prediction was confirmed by the Michelson-Morley experiment in 1887, which showed that the speed of light is the same in all directions and at all times.

Electromagnetic waves

Einstein proposed that all energy propagates through space in the form of waves. In other words, this would mean that light energy propagates through space in the form of electromagnetic waves. This prediction was confirmed by the discovery of radio waves by Heinrich Hertz in 1887.

Perturbation of Mercury's orbit

Astronomers had discovered a discrepancy in the orbital motion of the planet Mercury that could not be explained by Newton's theory of gravity. Einstein's theory of relativity provided a solution to this problem, which was confirmed by observations in 1915.

The general theory of relativity predicts that the orbit of Mercury is not a perfect ellipse, but rather a precessing ellipse. This prediction was confirmed by observations in 1915, which showed that the perihelion of Mercury advances by 43 arcseconds per century.
