3a. Forest Service—Headquarters

The Forest Service, which administers the nation's 155 national forests and 20 national grasslands, has five divisions: the National Forest System, Research and Development, State and Private Forestry, International Programs, and Business Operations. The public is most familiar with the National Forest System, which physically manages the 193 million acres under the agency's care. The agency has four levels of National Forest System officers. The Chief oversees the national level, which is headquartered in Washington, DC, and is typically called the Washington Office. Regional Foresters oversee the nine geographic regions, numbered 1 through 10 (Region 7 was eliminated some years ago), each encompassing several national forests and grasslands. The Forest Supervisor is the head of a national forest, which is divided into ranger districts managed by District Rangers. The 600+ ranger districts vary in size (50,000 acres to more than 1 million acres) and staff (10 to 100 people).
