In recent years it has become increasingly clear that the dynamics of cities can be best captured by looking at them as complex systems governed by many degrees of freedom interacting on different space and time scales in a non linear fashion The evolution of cities is shaped by internal factors e g decisions taken by ins tutions and individuals external causes international economic context and by social development The underlying processes can be slow or fast acting locally or globally At a different level both European cities and megacities are magnets for immigrants e g countries which have major economical and political problems leading often to phenomena like marginalization or even ghettization and segregation They are also hotbeds of economic political and cultural activity giving rise among other things to relocation and conversion of industries valuation of land and development of new services These phenomena as qualitative changes are opposed to purely quantitative growth processes They are far from being fully understood nor they are captured in validated and complete urban models For most of urban theory hitherto has been based on the assumption of slowly varying spatial and social structures Only recently these assumptions have been questioned giving rise to models employing dissipative dynamics stochastic cellular automata and multi agent models fractal geometry and evolutionary change models and to further mathematically oriented approaches

Innovation and Urban Population Dynamics Klaus Peter Strohmeier, Christian Wichmann Matthiessen, 1992 This comparative overview of urban population changes in Europe covers the last two centuries and identifies a sequence of progressive stages of urban development which one set of cities has gone through while others are just entering it More in depth analysis based on recent data reveals similarities as to subsequent concentration and deconcentration trends in the urban systems of economically advanced countries like France Germany Sweden or Italy while others like Turkey or the Eastern European urban systems are still in the concentration phase The position of national urban systems in an urban life cycle is closely correlated with the respective countries position in Europe's first and second demographic transition The impact of the second transition i.e. the deinstitutionalization of traditional family life and the emergence of new modern life styles and household types on recent and future urban development is analyzed A theoretical and empirical approach of multi level analysis is developed deriving assumptions on macro spatial changes from the analysis of dynamic micro behavioural processes
