

MERCURY

Thomas W. Clarkson

Division of Toxicology, University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, Rochester, New York 14642

Introduction

Mercury exists in a number of physical and chemical forms, each of which must be considered separately from the point of view of biological monitoring. Inorganic mercury exists in the metallic form ( $\text{Hg}^0$ , zero oxidation state), in the mercurous form ( $\text{Hg}_2^{2+}$ , oxidation state), and in the mercuric form ( $\text{Hg}^{2+}$ , oxidation state). Both the mercurous and mercuric cations can form a number of inorganic compounds. Furthermore, the mercuric cation is able to form covalent bonds with carbon atoms to produce a wide number of organic forms of mercury.

The inorganic forms of mercury occur naturally in the environment as well as being produced by man in mining and manufacturing activities. Methyl mercury is the only organic form of mercury known to be produced by natural processes. Biomethylation reactions carried out by methanogenic bacteria present in the sediments of bodies of fresh or saline waters are able to attach one or two methyl groups to the inorganic mercuric form. These mono and dimethyl forms of mercury accumulate in aquatic food chains and thereby enter the human diet (14).

A wide variety of organic forms of mercury have been synthesized and manufactured by man over the past century or so (7). Today, human exposure is mainly, if not exclusively, to two forms of mercury (19). The vapor of metallic mercury (mercury vapor) is the predominant form in occupational exposures. It is estimated that about 40,000 are occupationally exposed to this form of mercury. Monomethyl mercury, present in fish and fish products, is the other form of mercury that accounts for human exposures. This review, therefore, primarily discusses the biological monitoring for these two forms and discusses only briefly the other forms of mercury.

Mercury Vapor

Mercury vapor is a monatomic gas, highly diffusible and lipid-soluble. Approximately 80% of the inhaled vapor is retained in humans. From the bloodstream, it rapidly distributes to all the major organs and tissues in the
