From the Mailbox: Streetcars and Street Uses

By Lela Duff

As I have told you before, one of the pleasantest features of conducting this column is the help I get through the mail, both from friends and from strangers. Today I am going to quote for you some passages from two letters, one from a wife friend of mine who insists on remaining anonymous, the other passed on to me by a city official after it had been lying in his files for years, but written by a gentleman unwilling to give up at the time of writing was in the 1870's. Both might be classified in a "Do You Remember?" department and both recall former sights in our city streets.

"Do you remember old barns at the end of Lincoln," my anonymous friend begins, "where the street cars turned around? We sure had a unique system in our town. The cars started the motor running down the road, took steps and, with the necessary handles (I don't know what else one would call the implements that hitched on to either side of the car and connected to) levered the wheels, they climbed into what had been the rear end of the car and we were off.

"Another feature of our street car system was that the only destination on the front of the car were 'North' and 'South,' and a passenger who came in at the other end of the line the M. C. depot could reach his destination by boarding either car. That is still a relative of mine from the 1870's. 'What kind of a town is this?' he asked. 'Can't it make up its mind where its street cars are going?" The explanation of course was that the car turned north and the other south when it reached State St. at William, both ending up at the car barns and taking the return trip in reverse. All one needed to do to reach his objective was just sit. And the whole ride cost only a nickel.

"The combination motorman-conductor," the letter continues, "was a character probably the best known and liked was a man by the name of Jim Love. He was a hearty individual who greeted old patrons cheerfully, no matter what the weather. He attended to the needs for the infirm on or off, or passed packages out, and never failed to wish departing passengers a 'goodbye!'"

Another friend tells me that she and some companions were once riding home in the streetcar from a Halloween party, dressed in masquerade costumes, when a gang of students crossed from Hill Auditorium, lifted the car bodily off the tracks, dumped it on its side, and fled, leaving them to climb out the upturned windows.

Now for the other letter I told you of. The writer, Mr. J. E. Fisher, was brought up on a farm out West. The particular occasion recorded here, as you will see, took place in the year 1878—long before our complex motor traffic pre-empted the use of the stagecoach.

"Nowadays," he writes, "when marketable livestock is bought at the farms, it is loaded into a truck at the farm and taken to its destination. In those days, however, when I was a boy, the stockbuyer would come out to the farm, buy up the stock, and depend upon the farmer to make the delivery."

I well remember one such instance when our folks brought some stock to the market. I being a party to it. One man would take the lead in front of the stock and another man would take the lead in front of the car. A rider would take those on foot back home again after the delivery was made. I remember riding through Main St. with our car. The present courthouse was in the course of construction. (Our readers will understand that he is referring to the old brick court house on the west side of the street.) "We were on the dome which seemed to be completed up to about half of its final length. We paused for a few minutes to watch a dummy machine that a large saw blade had been fastened to, as it moved to the end of a cable up to that part of the unfinished dome. We then continued down N. Main St. over the Broadway bridge and across the Huron River, where we corralled the animals into a pen.

"What fascinated me the most," he continues, "was the big water-wheel that was driving the machinery in a flour mill that was then located just north of the Lower Town bridge. I carried the feed for the wheel with me."

O blessed day of leisurely pace when a boy could saunter along and look his fill without even having to worry about his being butchered before they reached the slaughterhouse!"

Psychically enough, shortly after I received this letter, I had those children, Walter and Mary, who wanted to tell me that he remembered herds of cattle being driven down the full length of State St. when he was a boy, perhaps as late as 1920. When she says that, his other words would quickly get the children into the house and close the door not because she feared the cattle might injure them, although she was a fairly creature and proud of her front legs, but because she didn't want her little ones to hear the language of the drovers!
