When Television was Young Paul

Rutherford, 1990-01-01 A decade after the first Canadian telecasts in September 1952 TV had conquered the country Why was the little screen so enthusiastically welcomed by Canadians Was television in its early years more innovative less commercial and more Canadian than current offerings In this study of what is often called the golden age of television Paul Rutherford has set out to dispel some cherished myths and to resurrect the memory of a noble experiment in the making of Canadian culture He focuses on three key aspects of the story The first is the development of the national service including the critical acclaim won by Radio Canada the struggles of the CBC's English service to provide mass entertainment that could compete with the Hollywood product and the effective challenge of private television to the whole dream of public broadcasting The second deals with the wealth of made in Canada programming available to please and inform viewers even commercials receive close attention Altogether Rutherford argues Canadian programming reflected as well as enhanced the prevailing values and assumptions of the mainstream The final focus is on McLuhan's Question What happens to society when a new medium of communications enters the picture Rutherford's findings cast doubt upon the common presumptions about the awesome power of television Television in Canada Rutherford concludes amounts to a failed revolution It never realized the ambitions of its masters or the fears of its critics Its course was shaped not only by the will of the government the power of commerce and the empire of Hollywood but also by the desires and habits of the viewers

Proceedings of the Royal Society of Canada Royal Society of Canada, 1984 Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory, 1981 Cultural Development in an Open Economy Stuart McFadyen, 1994 The tension between cultural objectives and commercial considerations will become even more important in the future as a result of the convergence of the broadcasting telecommunications and computer industries Technological improvements lower the barriers to movement of information and cultural products internationally and this in turn heightens the economic pressures which must be dealt with by those pursuing cultural goals As well as economic pressures new means of content delivery undermine the ability of regulators to control content This volume presents the thoughts of Canada's leading communication scholars on this problem and their suggestions as to how cultural industry researchers should orient their work to deal effectively with the problems faced by the cultural industries in an environment of much more open global competition Papers deal with cultural foundations cultural and economic policy the globalization of cultural industries special Quebec research issues Native and multicultural concerns as well as audience and business research The essays are reprinted from Volume 19 Number 3 4 a special issue of the Canadian Journal of Communication
