CASE STUDY ONE

ABSTRACT

Alex is a ten year old boy with a diagnosis of a disorder known as oppositional defiant disorder. His parents concerns with his behavior include disrespecting attitude towards women, non compliance with adult requests and often throws explosive tantrums. Alex has been expelled from several schools and he resides with his grandmother and mother. In addition to this, his parents divorced when he was only five years old and their marriage was often marked with by many significant disagreements and tension. As a child, Alex witnessed these arguments between his parents and even on one occasion, he witnessed his father hitting and showing his mother. The therapist will instead adopt the play therapy other than focus on a certain diagnosis or setting.

DISCUSSION

Alex's father remarried and he is now a father to other two children. The custody agreement in this case states that Alex's father should hold regular visits one day a week and all the weekends. However, his father has been quite inconsistent in this agreement as he misses the visits and often cancels the visits at the last minute.

Process descriptions of the actual client contacts

Alex: I do not think I feel like playing at all (Looking around the therapy room)

Therapist: Alex, you do not know if you want to do anything

Discussion: The therapist reflects and thinks about what Alex has said. This shows that the therapist is actually listening and is interested to hear what Alex will say. The therapist will not try to engage Alex in some of the games present in the therapy room as it is quite significant for the client that is, Alex to lead and the psychiatrist to follow.

Alex: (He continues to look around the room and walks over to the play bin and gets out some plastic play-dough. He also starts to make some cars from the plastic play-dough). Look at my nice cars!

Therapist: I see you have drawn three cars, two big ones and one small one.

Alex: These are a family of my cars (He then starts to pretend to drive them around.)

Therapist: Your family of three cars is driving around together and is close to each other. (During all this time, the therapist is keeping track of what Alex is doing and interpreting the play every time.)

Alex: (The biggest car crashes into the wall). That car was daddy's car and it was mean and bad and that is why it has hit the wall. The car is no more! Dad should not have done that! He is mean and now the car is all gone.

Therapist: That car did not do well and it is no longer a car at all. (At this point, Alex seems to be seething with some kind of anger and he even crashes all the cars and turns them into balls of plastic play-dough. The Family of cars is now gone.

Alex: Now they are my bombs and I am going to blow them all up.

Therapist: All the cars that you have regarded as fa
