

CASE STUDIES OF STUDENTS WITH EXCEPTIONAL NEEDS

The case studies in this chapter address the needs of students with the exceptionalities most often observed in classrooms. The purpose for the analysis of the studies is to reveal your philosophy of education that you developed in the last chapter to examine your strategies for helping students to grow better systems about teaching. Moreover, the purpose of a philosophy of education is to individualize your beliefs as a teacher. If you fail to consider your philosophy before you begin your problem solving, you produce only superficial solutions to the problem. Teacher problem solving is superficial when it addresses only the obvious symptoms of the problem—very students, difficult students, low achieving students. To be effective is to consider the larger instructional concerns—learning and assessment theory, developmental issues, and individual student history and needs—all necessary contributions to fully interpret the situation when attempting to solve the problem. Each case study gives answers but provides no definitive answers, because effective problem solving and the teacher's own philosophy will determine how the problem is solved.

To help you identify the quality of your reflective problem solving, a table is included after each case study. The table does not provide true answers or solutions but comments on the quality of the problem-solving process itself. The levels of the table distinguish three levels of quality describing the problem-solving process. The first level describes a fully developed problem-solving process, where all available knowledge is used to solve
