Come Shivering to Collect John F. Pleimann, 2021-01-12 The poems in John Pleimann's Come Shivering to Collect live and move and have their being in a world that is both twilight and sacred Speakers wrestle with memory's power to obsess and distort to haunt and to evoke They discover that life mocks happiness and the only thing sacred is to be vulnerable The voices in these poems look for salvation in the seasonal aisle at Walgreens in stray dogs that never come home in the destitute and downtrodden in the dead who in T.S. Eliot's words seem stuck in a time of tension between dying and birth Belief in the power of words to heal and a profound fear for what they veil propel these poems As one persona says What don't need no grammar saves you The speakers here muse on what words are after as if they have lives of their own There's nothing words can't keep from you no emptiness around you words can't flesh out What's the poet to do who suspects words know more than he does that words follow him hollow him and fill in what he lacks These poems reveal that we are words on our knees come shivering to collect
