Ipson,2015-02-11 Corneal diseases are a significant cause of visual impairment and confocal microscopes provide ophthalmologists with diagnostic sequences of images at incremental depths of the corneal layers and structures However many factors can make diagnosis more difficult including noise non uniform illumination both within and between images and eye movement during image capture Aiding ophthalmologists working with long sequences of corneal images requires the development of new algorithms The novel algorithms devised for this purpose and presented in this book are divided into four main categories enhancement to improve individual images automatic classification to identify which part of the cornea each image belongs to automatic reordering of images into the right sequence automatic registration of the images with each other Ophthalmic Technologies XVII Fabrice Manns,2007 Proceedings of SPIE present the original research papers presented at SPIE conferences and other high quality conferences in the broad ranging fields of optics and photonics These books provide prompt access to the latest innovations in research and technology in their respective fields Proceedings of SPIE are among the most cited references in patent literature Confocal Microscopy and Multiphoton Excitation Microscopy Barry R. Masters,2006 This text guides you through the principles and practical techniques of confocal and multiphoton microscopy It also describes the historical connections and parallel inventions that resulted in modern techniques of live cell imaging and their use in biology and medicine You will find comparisons of different types of confocal and multiphoton microscopes solutions to the problems one would encounter when using various microscopic techniques tips on selecting equipment and an extensive annotated bibliography of additional resources In Vivo Confocal Microscopy of the Abnormal Cornea Thaer Saad Alomar,2012 In vivo confocal microscopy IVCN offers a unique real time non invasive imaging method to explore live tissues at cellular and subcellular levels of histological detail with magnifications very much comparable to conventional ex vivo light microscopy Therefore it has been widely used over the past two decades to investigate the ocular surface and cornea in health disease and following surgical procedures One of the main challenges in understanding IVCM is to get a proper interpretation of the images that present various figures and patterns of tissue structures all in black and white with variable degree of reflectivity being whiter or brighter when they are more or hyper reflective The lack of good correlation between IVCM and corresponding light microscopy for the same tissue samples has lead to speculative interpretations of IVCM images in the literature In this work we tried to fill that gap through performing IVCM to patients with various corneal and ocular surface disorders just few days prior to obtaining the tissue samples corneal graft excisional biopsy or alcohol delamination for histopathological examination to make sure that IVCM images were truly representative to the tissue details that might change if more time was left to elapse between IVCM and tissue sampling In ocular surface disease group chapter three we contrasted IVCM criteria in conjunctival epithelial overgrowth onto the cornea in limbal stem cell deficiency and Pterygium like disorders with those seen in Corneal Conjunctival Intraepithelial neoplasia CIN to confirm reliable diagnostic criteria of CIN with IVCM In corneal oedema chapter four IVCM viewing of histologically confirmed subepithelial fibroblasts without clinically visible corneal scarring has been reported for the first time in IVCM literature particularly in Fuchs endothelial dystrophy Sub basal corneal nerve reduction as well as stromal keratocytes and endothelial changes were clearly illustrated with IVCM In keratoconus cases chapter five morphological epithelial changes related to regenerative atypia have been studied for the first time and compared to those seen in CIN through light microscopy and IVCM in addition to other epithelial changes associated with keratoconus Novel IVCM criteria for Bowman s zone breaks have been described and compared carefully with histological sections In corneal dystrophies chapter six IVCM criteria in Thiel Behnke s corneal dystrophy CDBII as well as in macular granular and lattice dystrophy correlated well with light microscopic findings with a novel IVCM pattern in one Macular dystrophy case In Acanthamoeba keratitis chapter seven a new form of Acanthamoeba cysts has been described for the first time through IVCM Moreover this study presented for the first time IVCM diagnostic criteria in corneal intraepithelial neoplasia keratoconus Acanthamoeba keratitis and some corneal dystrophies A comprehensive IVCM illustration of various types and stages of corneal fibrosis has been achieved as well
