Committees and the Decline of Lawmaking in Congress Jonathan Lewallen, 2020-08-14 The public journalists and legislators themselves have often lamented a decline in congressional lawmaking in recent years often blaming party politics for the lack of legislative output In Committees and the Decline of Lawmaking in Congress Jonathan Lewallen examines the decline in lawmaking from a new committee centered perspective Lewallen tests his theory against other explanations such as partisanship and an increased demand for oversight with multiple empirical tests and traces shifts in policy activity by policy area using the Policy Agendas Project coding scheme He finds that because party leaders have more control over the legislative agenda committees have spent more of their time conducting oversight instead Partisanship alone does not explain this trend changes in institutional rules and practices that empowered party leaders have created more uncertainty for committees and contributed to a shift in their policy activities The shift toward oversight at the committee level combined with party leader control over the voting agenda means that many members of Congress are effectively cut out of many of the institution's policy decisions At a time when many including Congress itself are considering changes to modernize the institution and keep up with a stronger executive branch the findings here suggest that strengthening Congress will require more than running different candidates or providing additional resources
