Congress At The Grassroots Representational Change In The South 1970 1998:

Congress at the Grassroots Richard F. Fenno Jr.,2003-06-19 However much politicians are demeaned and denounced in modern American society our democracy could not work without them For this reason says Richard Fenno their activities warrant our attention In his pioneering book Home Style Fenno demonstrated that a close look at politicians at work in their districts can tell us a great deal about the process of representation Here Fenno employs a similarly revealing grassroots approach to explore how patterns of representation have changed in recent decades Fenno focuses on two members of the U S House of Representatives who represented the same west central Georgia district at different times Jack Flynt who served from the 1950s to the 1970s and Mac Collins who has held the seat in the 1990s His on the scene observation of their differing representational styles Flynt focuses on people Collins on policy reveals the ways in which social and demographic changes inspire shifts in representational strategies More than a study of representational change in one district Congress at the Grassroots also helps illuminate the larger subject of political change in the South and in the nation as a whole

Congressional Communication Daniel William Lipinski,2009-12-10 Lipinski s impressive analysis of members communications with constituents yields major insights about partisanship effects on reelection prospects and constituent evaluations Bruce Oppenheimer Vanderbilt University The communication between representatives and their constituents is where election strategy and policy explanations are merged and until now we have had only anecdotal evidence Lipinski s book sheds light on this important part of American political life David Brady Stanford University Congressional Communication challenges the notion that legislators run against Congress by routinely denigrating the institution Using a unique systematic analysis of the communication from members of Congress to their constituents over a five year period Daniel Lipinski challenges this notion demonstrating key partisan differences in representatives portrayals of congressional activities While members of the majority party tend to report that the institution and hence their party is performing well members of the minority party are more likely to accuse Congress of doing a poor job The findings in Congressional Communication offer the first strong empirical evidence from the electoral arena in support of controversial party government theories Moving beyond previous studies that look only at legislators messages Lipinski s research also reveals the effects of these politically strategic claims on voters whose interpretations don t necessarily bear out the legislators intended effects Daniel Lipinski is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Tennessee
